Designing The Heart Of The Home

Project COMPORT demonstrates how considered planning can transform a living area into a space that feels warm, welcoming, and connected.

A striking fireplace creates a natural focal point, while curved cabinetry and warm tonal material selections bring depth and softness to the room.

The result is a living space designed for slow cozy evenings; whether gathering with family, entertaining friends, or simply enjoying a quieter moment at home.

Warmth is created through the details

Creating a cosy interior is not about filling a room with more. It comes from combining the right elements with intention.

Soft neutral tones, tactile fabrics, ambient lighting, and a farmhouse-inspired design create a bedroom that feels calm and inviting.

That same design language continues throughout the home.
Raspberry zellige tiles introduce warmth and character in the bathrooms, with the feature colour drawn from the home's original leadlight windows.

Thoughtful repetition of colour, texture, and material gives the home a cohesive feeling from one space to the next.
